Loggerhead Sea Turtle

Linda has just come back from the Greek island of Zakynthos after helping with a turtle conservation project there. She says, "Every summer, thousands of females lay their eggs in the sand of the beach. The problem is that tourists often damage their nests by accident. They also leave garbage like plastic bags that the turtles mistake for food. Every day at dawn, our team did a survey of nests and eggs. It was tiring but we saw some spectacular sunrises! During the day, we also went round the beach and told tourists all about the turtles. I've already told my friends that I'm going back next year- and that they're coming with me!"
